

PASSING PLACE

A film by Nicky Coutts

DV-PAL 21:47 mins, 2009

Passing Place (2009) is set at a remote crossroads in rural Northumberland. Scenes from six feature films, where significant moments occur at crossroads, are re-enacted by local people who live or work nearby and know the location well. Film excerpts from Oedipus Rex, (Paolo Pasolini, 1967); Down By Law, (Jim Jarmusch 1986); Cool Hand Luke (Stuart Rosenberg, 1967); Castaway, (Robert Zemeckis 2000); Divine Horsemen: The Living Gods of Haiti, (Maya Deren, 1985) and The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie, (Luis Buñuel, 1972) show people coming and going at this one location.

Crossroads are traditionally where life-changing decisions are made. Seen as unhallowed ground in most Western cultures, they represent a threshold between the worlds of the living and the dead. Vampires are believed to congregate there at midnight waiting for their next victim to pass by, while in Germany the pottery of the deceased is smashed at the crossroads to protect the souls of the recently departed and whips are cracked at remote crossroads on Walpurgis night to rid the area of demons and witches. In Voodoo, Ghedes, the God of the Crossroads, waits in a long black coat (and now sunglasses) at this boundary between the material world and the world of spirit ready to lead new souls to the afterlife. Neither consistently malevolent nor benevolent, the crossroads is always a site of transformation where what was dependable and familiar is liable to take an unexpected turn.

Passing Place presents the known, familiar form of the crossroads transformed slightly with ever visitation. Each local participant, a frequent passer-by in any case, is this time at the crossroads to stage something out of the ordinary passage of the day, re-visiting a fiction that nevertheless originally did take place elsewhere at another similar location. In Heather Phillipson's essay 'An Art of Surprise', written about all of Coutts' work made over the same year, she begins with "Here are some images that do not tell the truth. Neither do they tell an untruth. Instead they succeed in telling precisely neither of these things."

Passing Place could be seen as a bizarre experiment, how many fictions can you pile one on top of another before a slither of fact is revealed? However, if fact emerges its temporary and if fictions are re-enacted they fast become an inseparable part of the location they are were newly sited in. Passing Place is a new story of the crossroads that doesn't tell the truth....
