During 2013 and 2014, artist Nicky Coutts has been working in the unusual setting of The National Trust for Scotland’s Inverewe Gardens in Wester Ross. Supported by Creative Scotland and Scottish Natural Heritage, Nicky launches her new artwork Under the Weather as part of ‘The Year of Natural Scotland.’

Coutts opted to work at Inverewe as its landscape represents many of the contradictions inherent in our understanding of the term “natural world”. Her shelter on the shoreline speculates on how we experience landscapes with layered and complex histories.

The gardens at Inverewe are in many ways an anomaly; a sub-tropical oasis in what should be rugged and barren terrain. They only exist because a shelter-belt of trees and the warming affects of the gulf stream in combination, protect their tender plants from the elements. Without either the trees or the Gulf Stream, the gardens as they are now would perish. Inverewe would become simply a maritime gardens in keeping with the landscape that surrounds them, no longer a place that borrows and nurtures plants from far ranging latitudes around the world.

Under the Weather, installed on the shoreline of Inverewe, reflects on the visionary achievements of the Victorian founder of the gardens, Osgood Mackenzie who sought to shape the natural environment in his image, to compete with The Royal Horticultural Gardens at Kew. For Mackenzie this meant the gardens must reflect not so much his time spent locally on Scottish soil, but his observations on the growing habits of plants from all the places he visited further afield, literally “grubbing up” specimens to trial in his Northern micro-climate.

Coutts was fascinated by this overlaying of one “natural environment” on another and sourced, based on scant notes, a series of images referencing the exact dates of Mackenzie’s travels. These form a prominent part of her shelter. The interior of the artwork yields a fascinating array of 23 small circular windows. You can literally see through transparent images of the places Mackenzie saw, such as the Drakensberg Mountains in South Africa, an Olive Grove in Palestine to the stark, empty Scottish headland beyond resembling Inverewe before the planting began.

This strangely beguiling artist-designed structure straddles in many guises the boundaries between worlds: wild and managed; interior and exterior; safe and unprotected. It has one prow-like end directed towards the oncoming Atlantic winds; a reminder of the fragile hold the gardens have on their locality. The shape of the structure offers a nautical feel, with its portal windows it looks and is placed as though it might float off in a storm. Yet this is contradicted by a distinctive bronze-weather vane with glow-in-the-dark arrows, foxes and exotic plants, whirling majestically on its highest point recalling a more land-locked structure bound by the rituals of farm or church.

Nicky Coutts’ unique structure operates as a practical shelter protecting visitors from the familiar sudden squall common and unpredictable in the region; but is also a compelling quiet space in which to re-imagine how our experience of landscape is formed.

PRESS INFO

Under the Weather is at Inverewe Gardens, Poolewe, Achnasheen, Ross-Shire IV22 2LG until October 2014.
A film of Nicky Coutts, by Catherine Weir, talking about the residency and artwork.

http://vimeo.com/91368968

Nicky Coutts’ work has been shown internationally both in a residency context and in solo and group exhibitions. Coutts works across different materials and techniques includes photography drawing, film and sculptural installations. In recent years, her work has been shown in Germany, Austria, Japan and notably was commissioned to make new work for the highly regarded Tatton Park Biennial, 2008.

Currently, she is exhibiting in two groups shows - The Negligent Eye at The Bluecoat Gallery, Liverpool (until 15th June 2014) and Printmare, Against Nature in Camberwell Space, London (until 30th May 2014).

Coutts is represented by Danielle Arnaud Contemporary Art, London and teaches in the Printmaking Department at The Royal College of Art, London.

FOR MORE INFORMATION Please Contact Susan Christie on 07841591873 susiechristie@goolemail.com or Sandra Morrison NTS Learning Manager (Events) on 0844 4931 684, 07713 786 254 smorrison@nts.org.uk

Artists phone interviews and high-res images available: https://www.flickr.com/photos/122632347@N03/ Contact: Nicky Coutts nickycoutts@talktalk.net

Creative Scotland is the public body that supports the arts, screen and creative industries across all parts of Scotland on behalf of everyone who lives, works or visits here. We enable people and organisations to work in and experience the arts, screen and creative industries in Scotland by helping others to develop great ideas and bring them to life. We distribute funding provided by the Scottish Government and the National Lottery. For further information about Creative Scotland please visit www.creativescotland.com. Follow us @creativecscs and www.facebook.com/CreativeScotland